

Tom Van Heeke is Policy Lead for New Mobility Systems and Climate Change at General Motors. In this role, Tom is responsible for policy considerations related to urban mobility and the company's response to climate change.

Prior to joining General Motors, Tom served as a transportation budget and policy analyst with the Legislative Analyst's Office in California. He began his career with Frontier Group, a think tank, where he studied and wrote extensively on state and local transportation and environmental issues.

He has been quoted by media outlets including Streetsblog.org and the Associated Press, featured as an interview guest on California public affairs show The Maddy Report, and has testified as an expert witness before the California State Legislature on several occasions.

Tom is a graduate of Grinnell College and the University of Michigan's Ford School of Public Policy. He lives car-free in Detroit.